Maybe I will leave

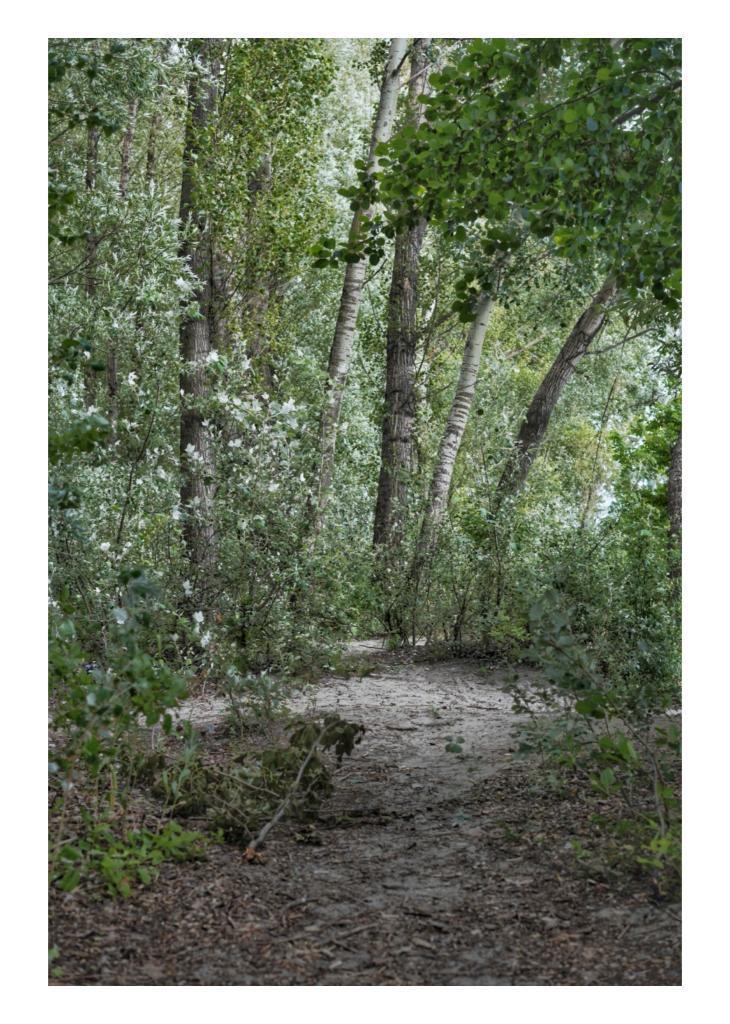

Maybe I will leave is a collaborative dialogue aimed to reflect on what it means to live as a woman, away from one's home country. It focuses on issues of migration, construction of the self, memory and belonging. Ultimately, it is a pretext to explore more intimate territories and reflect on my own situation as an outsider in Vienna.

If I love Vienna so much it is certainly because I never stopped loving Douala

Omaima

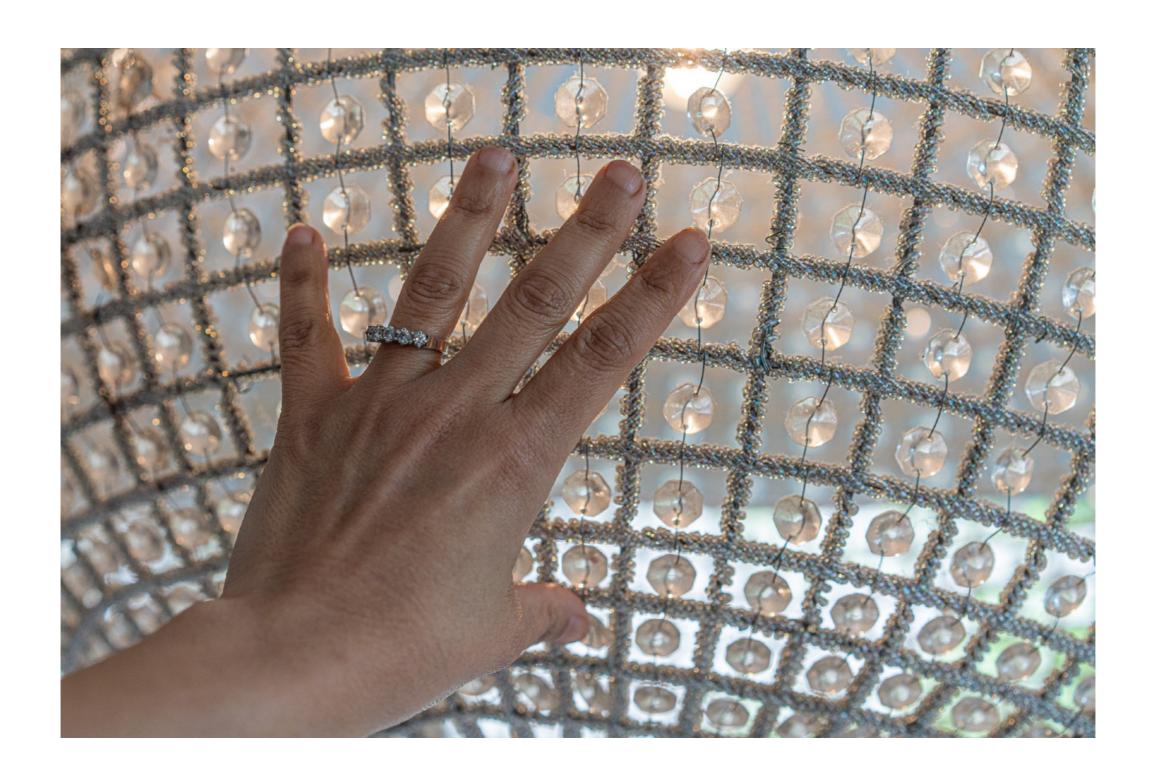

I am from everywhere

and nowhere

my genes are

from Cairo

my youth

Belgian

my heart

Moroccan or Turkish

I live

in a parallel world

where

English

French

and Arabic

are spoken

I am a nomad

Bedouin in my heart

like my ancestors
